Vibe Vault is an app used to access music from Archive.org's Live Music Archive. Our list of keywords was merely a list of artists that users of our app could listen to by using Vibe Vault. Thus, when a user who wanted to listen to "Artist X" searched for "Artist X" on the Play store, our app would appear.

Vibe Vault does not violate the keyword spam policy. The 1,000 word appeal limit does not allow me to address every point of the policy, but our keywords were helpful and accurately told users which artists they could find on our app.

Vibe Vault has been well-received by users, and before our app was abruptly removed from the market, we had never been accused of using any sort of keyword spam tactic. This is reflected by, our high rating, and the fact that no users ever complained about accidentally downloading our app due to spam keywords.

Vibe Vault is a free app, with no ads. We don't profit from it, and thus have no incentive to spam. Please reinstate Vibe Vault.

You will receive a response to the email address provided either accepting or denying your appeal. All appeal decisions are final, but you may upload a new, policy-compliant instance of your app if your account is still in good standing. Note that we will not provide guidance on the potential compliance of your future implementation, so submissions requesting advice will not receive an answer.
